RED BULL
NEPTUNE STEPS

Fancy a swim in a freezing Scottish canal? No? Then this open-water swimming race – one of the world’s hardest – is not for you. But you can still spectate. The ‘uphill’ course forces competitors to swim 420m and climb 18m over seven lock gates in water as chilly as 3°C. And 2018 winners Dan Jones and Jennifer Davis will face tough competition this year – not least from Ross Edgley, fresh from his record-breaking circuit of Britain.

The Grand Expedition
Gingerline does for supper clubs what Secret Cinema delivers for movies, and this is its greatest immersive-dining experience yet: five courses of gastronomy, served up in a living story. Tickets for April and May are now on sale, so act fast. Secret location, London; thegrandexpedition.co.uk

16 February to 9 March
Mushroom Rally
If you’re hoping for an event that celebrates the portobello or the shiitake, sorry to burst your bubble: this is live-action Mario Kart, touring the UK. For your gold coins, you get 30 minutes at the wheel, and the Super Mario costume of your choice. Projectile red shells not included. Various locations, UK; mushroomrally.com

28 to 31 March
Re-Textured Festival
The warehouse rave isn’t what it used to be: it has ascended to a higher art-form, performed in London’s most iconic Brutalist buildings. These are the perfect venues for a session of hard drone or techno, and even some old-school ambient from The Orb – who remember when raves really were raves. Across London; re-textured.com

13 to 28 March
Blue Planet II: Live
Could wildlife documentary-making get any better than David Attenborough’s incredible body of work, which began 67 years ago with a search for prehistoric fish? The answer is yes. Blue Planet II: Live In Concert presents scenes from one of the legendary naturalist’s greatest-ever series, on the big screen, with a live orchestra performing its Hans Zimmer-composed soundtrack. The show, which sadly doesn’t include live Attenborough, will tour the UK and Ireland across 14 dates. Various locations, UK and Ireland; blueplanet2live.co.uk
