

The week in London

Edited by Eddy Frankel and Sonya Barber
@timeoutlondon

Do me a flavour!

If your typical meal involves 'layer upon layer of dining realities', you probably need to lay off the hash cookies, dude. But if it happens at Chambers of Flavour – the new project from the brains behind interactive pop-up supper club Gingerline – then you're in for a tasty treat. Billed as 'multi-dimensional dining', this is a new experience that sees diners ferried through a series of immersive worlds, each containing a themed foodstuff. At their last event (with a different concept to this run), guests were sent into a jungle, where an explorer urged them to search the forest canopy for salad-filled plastic orbs, before a Singaporean hawker/market trader served up summer rolls in a neon-lit back street. If that sounds like a memorable experience, the new one launching on September 22 promises to be even wilder. Just a shame that tickets sold out as soon as they were announced last month, right? Wrong! Because we can exclusively announce (you're welcome) a hot new batch of tickets for the December slots, on sale today at noon. Tuck in! Alexi Duggins
Head to www.gingerline.co.uk.

THE ESSENTIALS Three things you have to do this week

DRINK THIS

Tequila. Some say it makes you happy. Others say that it gives you the hangover from hell. Find out for yourself as the Tequila & Mezcal Festival hits Spitalfields this weekend for a second year of salt, lime, Mexican grub and more.

SEE THIS

The night tube might be delayed but that's not stopping the London Transport Museum celebrating all things nocturnal. Its new exhibition 'Night Shift – London After Dark' proves that small-hours travel goes beyond bad night-bus journeys.

EAT THIS

What makes the perfect burger? The peeps at Poco want to know and they've asked some of their cool foodie friends to create a 5 Star Burger on Wednesday to raise cash for Action Against Hunger. Tickets cost £25: find out more on our blog.

Looking for more London fun? Get an eyeful at timeout.com/blog